

Dieringers in Vanuatu

Jill sliced two of her fingers while clearing her garden with a machete. Ouch! We thank God that the accident wasn't worse! Jill needed some proper medicine and time to recover, but she has healed nicely. She's likely to have a couple small scars, but we are glad she's back.

Donalyn's concern is ongoing. She developed a large flesh-eating tropical boil on her wrist. The DIY island medicine— a poultice (moist leaf compact) - was not drawing out the infection, so we arranged for her and her mom to travel to Santo in order to receive care from the hospital and private clinic there. She has now been in the hospital for a week. Per our update from Donalyn today, the infection has been drained and she is making progress on her recovery. We are praying and hoping for a full recovery, but we understand this may take months. The wound area is very large. Please pray with us for Donalyn. She also is a vital part of drafting our literacy readers that we are developing for the local schools in Motlap.

God foreknew that we would be short-handed for a season and he providentially sent us help!

That extra pair of hands was Stacy's! Stacy has been part of the team of young women who had helped us resettle into our home. Despite being actually afraid of spiders, Stacy had been blessed by her time with us and asked if she could come back for another visit. We had already seen Stacy's exemplary character first hand so we were eager to agree. During her ten days with us, Stacy was a huge blessing.

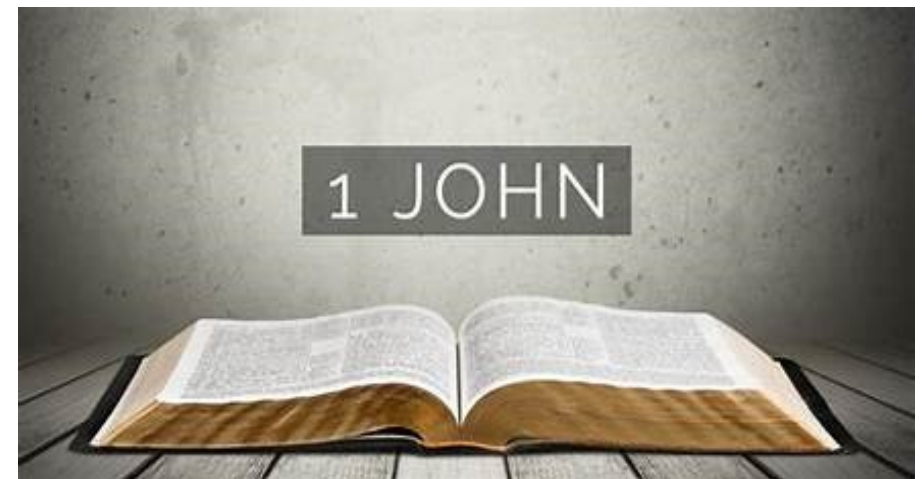

See the Welcome Center bulletin board for the full missionary prayer letters.
